Evening Brief

Date/Time Stamp: Wednesday, July 22, 2015 - 9:01 PM

Weather Summary

A low pressure center moving through northern Nevada and up into Idaho today will generate widespread showers and thunderstorms in those areas. These storms will be further enhanced by a trough over the PacNW. Scattered thunderstorms are also expected over northern and central Utah.

Drier southwest flow is spreading into the southern third of the Great Basin for generally sunny skies there today. This dry air will spread further north on Thursday limiting the thunderstorm activity to central/eastern Idaho, western Wyoming and northeast Nevada.

Dry southwest flow will generally overspread the region for the weekend for a return of sunny skies. Relative humidity will drop into the single digits across the southern third of the Great Basin beginning on Saturday.

Great Basin Fire Potential Summary

Large fire potential will continue to remain LOW through this week due to recent wet weather, and upcoming additional wet weather from monsoon moisture/remnants of Hurricane Dolores. Light to occasional moderate Initial Attack is expected through this week due to lightning, with low potential for significant spread.

With dryness returning for the weekend fire potential will gradually increase once again.
